THE abundant literature written by and about James Abbott McNeill Whistler, and the widespread interest manifested in the artist and his works by art-lovers, critics, and collectors, provide the excuse for making this little Bibliography. It cannot pretend to be complete in all particulars, but will furnish a ready guide, it is hoped, to the more important writings and to the catalogues of the artist's paintings, etchings, and lithographs.

Besides being a Master of the Brush, Pencil, and Etching Needle, and pretty handy with his Pen, Mr Whistler was a Master of the great art of attracting attention which is given to a carefully selected few of the earth's millions, by some well-planned scheme that accurately gauges the amount the universe can stand. This he cultivated and practised. From the West Point day, when he neglected to recall that silicon was not a gas, to his last hour he made himself the centre of interest in whatever circle he cared to affect until the world was his stage.

Theatrical, eccentric, and quarrelsome according to the common view, he had, on the other hand, a nice idea of the requirements of advertising, and quite upset the ethics of his profession by his assiduity in keeping himself before the public until his merits as an artist were so clearly recognized as no longer to need what might be called the "playing up" of his personality.

Whatever hardships may have attended his long career, they were the results of temperament rather than obscurity. His was no attic genius shivering in the shade. He lived as he pleased, liked and hated as he pleased, through the many-hued years of the last two-thirds of the nineteenth century, and stood long enough on the threshold of the twentieth to be remembered as one of the great figures clustered about its dawn.

The numerous conflicts carried on in the London press, the art societies, and the courts were summed up for all time in "The Gentle Art of Making Enemies," issued in 1890. Neither the idea nor the title was Whistler's, but the material was, and the book is the true starting-point in Whistler literature.

The alternating remarks of "E." and "J." in the Pennell biography are not always accurate, and their errors concerning the creation of "The Gentle Art" are worthy of correction. This combination of pertness and pasquinade, with clear sense in art, had its origin in the ingenious mind of Mr Sheridan Ford, a talented American journalist, poet, and critic. While in London writing for the Bacheller Syndicate in the late eighties, he formed the acquaintance of Whistler, and the fortunes of both being at a low ebb, it occurred to Mr Ford that the letters and talks of the artist might be put together in an interesting book, to their mutual advantage. Mr Whistler showed but languid interest in the work. Mrs Whistler encouraged the editor and finally aroused some attention on the part of the artist. The inevitable break did not come until Mr Whistler, in going over the completed book, ordered a letter from Oscar Wilde, which replied to Whistler's charge of plagiarism (Jan. 9, 1890, page 118, Ford Edition), omitted. It accused the artist in plain terms of lying. Mr Ford thought it unfair to omit the letter, and Whistler's sharp refusal to permit its retention led to a violent quarrel, with threatened fisticuffs, which ended in Mr Ford's departing with the copy, determined to issue it on his own responsibility, though then and there forbidden to do so. It was put into type by Messrs Field & Tuer, of the Leadenhall Press, and plates were made, but no impressions had been taken, when learning that Mr Whistler objected, they declined to proceed with its publication. As it was not legally feasible to publish it in London, Mr Ford took the book in hasty flight to Antwerp. Originally it had borne the commonplace title of "The Correspondence of James McNeill Whistler." The printer, with a keen eye to the merit of the work, objected to so poor a name and was invited by the compiler to pick a better one if he could. This he very promptly did. Pointing to a paragraph in the introduction, written by Mr Ford, reading: "This collection of letters and miscellany covers something over a quarter of a century, from 1862 to the present year. It illustrates the gentle art of making enemies, and is in part the record of some unpleasantness between the Brush and Pen"—he said: "There's your title. Don't use this other thing." And "there" it was.

Put into type once more, two thousand copies were printed off, when the irate and pursuing artist, with the help of the Procureur du Roi and Sir George Lewis, caused the confiscation of both forms and paper.

Determined not to be thwarted, and burning to defeat his adversary, Mr Ford retreated to Ghent, where he found another English printer who agreed to compose and print the book in three days. The 1000 francs capital brought from London to Antwerp had been exhausted, but Mr Ford's watch and jewelry remained, and a friendly mont-de-piété furnished 500 francs, funds enough to insure the printer, and the book came out on time and eluded "Jimmy." It bore this title: "The Gentle Art of Making Enemies. Edited by Sheridan Ford. Paris: Delabrosse & Cie, 1890." It carried this dedication:

"To all good comrades who like a fair field and no quarter these pages are peacefully inscribed."

Mr Ford was quite fair in his introductory note, saying amiably: "As custom would sanction, in a work of this character, a complacent boast touching the sometime soulful intimacy between Mr Whistler and myself, I may point out that nothing of the kind existed. The reader might otherwise be pardoned a casual inference that we were on terms of commonplace amity and acquiescence. I commend the book to Mr Whistler's enemies, with the soothing assurance that should each of them purchase a copy the edition will be exhausted in a week."

The little 12mo included 256 pages, and a two-page advertisement of "Art: A Commodity. By Sheridan Ford." It was bound in grey-green paper, with the title but not the imprint on the front cover. Butterflies in silhouette mark the Whistler notes. I have seen but one copy—my own—and have noted but two in the sales. Although 4000 copies were printed, few reached the book-stalls. A supply of sheets bearing the New York imprint of "Frederick Stokes & Brother" was shipped to the United States. The binding was similar to that of the Delabrosse edition, but the cover title was imprinted in red. When a few copies had been sold, the balance were destroyed by a fire in the Messrs Stokes' establishment. It is a true rarity.

The enmity engendered became permanent, and Mr Ford, in his clever "Art of Folly," "penned," as he says, "in the small hours of many miserable mornings when I had returned to my rooms in the Street of the Little Fields from my daily grind," on Galignani's (Paris) Messenger, embalmed the painter thus—

"One 'Jimmie' Whistler, noted for his bile,
His backstair methods and amazing style,
Said, once upon a time, in lewd dispraise,
That art herself was on the Town these days.
A senile fancy, sired of shallow wit,
And, like its author, tainted and unfit;
Serving to prove the looseness of the clown
Who should have said himself was on the Town."

Yet to Mr Ford, Mr Whistler owed more than to any other man. He introduced him to the wider world through the compilation of and rumpus over "The Gentle Art."

In further rhymes on "The Art of Folly," Mr Ford came close to a correct view of the painter, when he wrote—

"For many years the prints of London Town
Have treated 'Jimmie' Whistler as a clown,
While Yankee Journals tailed the Cockney van
And showed him as a snobbish, vain old man.
He's all of that; but he is something more,
And years to be his prestige shall restore.
When 'Jimmie' sleeps beneath the daisied sod—
In peace, at last, with man if not with God—
Then we'll forget the 'Jimmie' whom we know,
The vulgar 'Jimmie,' posed for public show,
Who proves in ways at war with wit and art
That workers and their work are things apart,
And we'll remember Whistler, that clear type

Of clean achievement, serious and ripe ;
Of art successes so sustained and true
They tend to boggle Ruskin and his crew
Who yet maintain—as Turner lovers can!—
A painter is, perforce, a gentleman.
'Twas Whistler who, with vision that transcends,
Pressed on serenely where Velasquez ends,
And took the methods of the Japanese—
Their shy suggestion and seductive ease—
And shaped for curious Nineteenth-Century needs
The colour schemes that only genius breeds.
Their lyricism, perfect yet restrained,
Reveals what goals by reticence are gained.
His etchings and his lithographs beguile
With strange, mysterious subtleties of style ;
They take you to high places, where, below,
The wavering lights and shadows come and go.
His portraits have a dignity and grace
Such as the Madrid master loved to trace.
His nocturnes and his symphonies invite,
With haunting melodies of liquid light
That will transmit their charms to other days
For other Ruskins to refuse their praise."

With quick appreciation Mr Whistler seized upon the title of the book. In conjunction with William Heinemann, who was just entering into the publishing world, he put together "The Gentle Art" in its well-known form, labouring in the printing shop and designing the novel forms of typography with which 'tis graced and which were followed in "The Baronet and the Butterfly." It was issued in the same year as the Ford editions, 1890, and promptly enough to meet the tide of interest aroused by the controversy. With customary whimsicality Mr Whistler retained the Wilde letter which had started the row.

It was not put into type in America, but came in a few hundred sheets to the John W. Lovell Company, then important publishers of reprints in New York. The Lovells received it at the instance of the late Wolcott Balestier, a young Vermonter, who was their literary agent in England. Balestier had an extraordinary talent for locating literary values. He pushed Heinemann into the publishing business and discovered Kipling for America. "The Plain Tales" and "Mine Own People" had come out of Allahabad like a blaze of light, and were seized in the absence of copyright by Balestier and sent to the Lovells with the remark that he would settle with the author when he reached England, that genius being then en route across the Seven Seas. About the same time he wrote to Mr John W. Lovell that if he could have his salary raised he would bring his sister over from Vermont to keep house for him. This was done, and the Balestier-Kipling relationship began—romance and all.

Mr Ford's book included much of his own writing about Whistler, and contained a number of the best anecdotes extant. Mr Whistler omitted these features from his edition.

The first recorded appearance in print of Mr Whistler is the initial letter in the Ford edition of "The Gentle Art," the communication to the Athenæum of July 5, 1862, where he corrects the "erroneous impression" given by that publication that his picture "The Woman in White" was intended to bear some relation to the novel by Wilkie Collins which bore the same title.

His first publication, if it could be so dignified, was a leaflet describing the Peacock room in the Leyland house, written in 1877, on the occasion of opening it to view. It was printed by Thomas Way.

"Mr Whistler's Lecture on Art," by Algernon Charles Swinburne, the attack on "Ten o'Clock" which produced "An Apostasy" in "The Gentle Art," appeared in the Fortnightly Review for June 1888, and marked the end of their mutual adorations.

The "Flinging a Pot of Paint in the Public's Face" criticism by Ruskin, which led to the famous libel suit of Whistler v. Ruskin, appeared in "Fors Clavigera," July 2, 1877, and opened the period of pamphleteering on behalf of the Whistler School of Art.

The earliest effort to catalogue Whistler's etchings was made by Ralph Thomas, in 1874. It contained a portrait of the artist etched by Percy Thomas. But fifty copies were issued by John Russell Smith. It carried the New York imprint of Samuel P. Avery.

The first published illustration by Mr Whistler was a lithograph, the title-page of a sheet of music, "Song of the Graduates" written by a cadet, "Designed by Cadet Whistler" and put through the process by Sarony & Major, New York, 1852.

In his later years Mr Whistler's pen was rarely used. His letter written at The Hague to the London Morning Post of August 6, 1902, correcting some errors in a kindly mention of his illness made a few days before, was in the usual sprightly tone, appealing, as it did, "To your own sense of kind sympathy, when I tell you that I learn I have, lurking in London still, 'a friend!'—though for the life of me I cannot remember his name."

The last letters found in print were to the New York Sun and Will H. Low, to whom Mr Whistler sought to convey a piece of his mind viâ the newspaper channel, under date of May 8, 1903. They grew out of the dispute in which Mr Low became involved with the Hanging Committee of the Society of American Artists, over the placing in its exhibition of "Rosa Corder" and two marines by Whistler, loaned by Charles L. Freer of Detroit, on the promise that they would be hung in a place of honour. Mr Whistler sent the correspondence to the Sun's London Office, from which it was cabled to New York and published on May 9.

The Compiler is under special obligations to Mr Howard Mansfield for assistance in collecting the material. Thanks are further due to Mr C. L. Freer, Mr Ripley Hitchcock, Mr Frederick Keppel, Mr R. A. Canfield, Mr Charles H. Taylor, Jr., the Messrs Obach, Richard Rathbun, Acting Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, Mr V. G. Fischer and Mr Randall Davies, F.S.A., for valuable information. Use has also been made of the Victoria and Albert Museum Catalogue, the Bulletin of Books, issued by the Boston Public Library, the several items of Whistler Bibliography published by Mr A. E. Gallatin in the New York Times and in the Literary Collector, and the "Notes," by T. R. Way and G. R. Dennis, in the Book-lover's Magazine.

THE GENTLE ART OF MAKING ENEMIES. Edited by Sheridan Ford. 12mo, 256 pages. Paris: Delabrosse & Cie, 1890. (20)

First edition to get into circulation. Printed in Ghent. Bound in grey-green paper, with title repeated on first leaf of cover. Reissued same year in blue wrapper with the following cover title by same publishers: "Second Edition (Original Authorised Version). The Gentle Art of Making Enemies. Edited by Sheridan Ford."

THE GENTLE ART OF MAKING ENEMIES. Edited by Sheridan Ford. 12mo, 256 pages. Paper. Cover title in red. New York: Frederick Stokes & Brother, 1890. (21)

Bound in grey-green paper from sheets printed in Ghent. But few copies put into circulation. Balance consumed by fire in the Messrs Stokes' establishment.

THE GENTLE ART OF MAKING ENEMIES, as Pleasingly Exemplified in many Instances wherein the Serious ones of this Earth, Carefully Exasperated, have been prettily spurred on to Unseemliness and Indiscretion, while overcome by an Undue Sense of Right. 4to, 292 pages. London: (William Heinemann) 1890. (22)

Mr Whistler's own version issued several months after Mr Ford's, though in the same year. Bound in brown boards, yellow back, with title in italic capitals, embellished with a butterfly drawn by Whistler, and the word "Chelsea," all stamped in gilt on cover.

Part of the American edition published simultaneously by the John W. Lovell Company, New York, was bound in green cloth, with the same embellishments on cover, but increased by a smoking censer, over the word "Chelsea," also stamped in gilt. The rest followed the style of the English edition.

This first Whistler edition included 150 numbered copies on large paper for Europe and 100 for America, on deckle paper, the latter also issued through the Lovell Company. All the sheets were printed at the Ballantyne Press.

The second edition, published by Heinemann in 1892, was enlarged to include the Catalogue of "Nocturnes, Marines and Chevalet Pieces," and five more letters, three written by Whistler.

The third edition (Heinemann), of 1904, is an exact reproduction of the issue of 1890. Putnams were the New York publishers.

NOCTURNES, MARINES & CHEVALET PIECES. Small Collection Kindly Lent by Their Owners. "The Voice of a People" on second page after title. Small 4to, 29 pages. Brown covers, with butterfly mark on first leaf and "Nocturnes, Marines & Chevalet Pieces." "J. McNeill Whistler, Chelsea," in type. (London: 1892.) (23)

Catalogue of the famous exhibition at Goupil Gallery, London. Six editions issued. The first destroyed by fire, except about six copies. The second edition title omits "by" before "Their Owners"—a misprint.

A SERIES OF LITHOGRAPHS OF SCENES AND PLACES DESCRIBED IN WASHINGTON IRVING'S "ALHAMBRA," by Joseph Pennell. Exhibited at the Fine Art Society's, October 1896. With an introductory letter by James McNeill Whistler. 8 pages. London: 1896. (24)

FINE ART SOCIETY CATALOGUE FOR DEC. 1896. (25)

Introductory note by Whistler.

ILLUSTRATED SOUVENIR. Catalogue of the Exhibition of International Art, Knightsbridge. London: International Society of Sculptors, Painters and Gravers. 8vo. London: William Heinemann, 1898. (26)

With notes by Whistler concerning some of his exhibits and illustrations.

A CATALOGUE OF THE PICTURES, DRAWINGS, PRINTS AND SCULPTURE at the Second Exhibition of the International Society of Sculptors, Painters and Gravers, held at Knightsbridge, May-July 1899. London: International Society of Sculptors, Gravers and Painters, 1899. (27)

With notes by Whistler, a facsimile and illustrations.

EDEN Versus WHISTLER. The Baronet and the Butterfly. A Valentine, with a Verdict. Sq. 8vo, 81 pages. Paris: Louis Henry May, 11, rue St Benoît, 1899. Imprint: Achevé d'imprimer le 10 février 1899 sur les presses "Valentine," Paris. (28)

Of this edition, 125 numbered copies were issued on large paper for Europe and 125 for America. Robert Howard Russell published the American edition under the 1899 date, but his copyright reads 1898. The Russell edition gives the "L'Envoi" with the butterfly mark, ". . . as a man wipeth a dish—wiping and turning it upside down!" at the beginning instead of at the end of the book, while its cover title omits "Eden versus Whistler" and reads: "The Baronet and the Butterfly. A Valentine with a Verdict. J. McNeil Whistler," and carries a different "butterfly" mark. Mr Heinemann had been selected as the publisher of this book, but writing to him under date of Nov. 27, 1898, Mr Whistler said:

"This American impatience, and the smart method of announcement that distributes pages of an unfinished book to the newspapers—'of which there is no end'—has destroyed for the time the pleasure I looked forward to in presenting with you the pretty story of 'The Baronet and the Butterfly,' to my London people.

"I must really change the venue—what do you think?

"Your first feeling in this matter was so entirely with me that I will at once abuse your sympathy and frankly ask you to transfer your camaraderie, and the glory of aide-de-camp, to a Frenchman—whom I shall choose.

"This is no mere easy ingratitude, on my part, as a friend. Of far greater magnitude is the villainy. I will not stop to dilate on it. Suffice it to say that Napoleon and I do these things, and France shall have the Baronet first."

third Exhibition of the International Society of Sculptors, Painters and Gravers, held in the Galleries, 191 Piccadilly, October 7 to December 10, 1901. London: The Printing Arts Company, Limited, 1901. (29)

With notes by Whistler and Illustrations.

WILDE v. WHISTLER; being an Acrimonious Correspondence on Art between Oscar Wilde and James A. McNeill Whistler. Small 4to, 20 pages. Yellow wrappers, with title repeated on first leaf. London: Privately printed. MCMVI. (30)

Edition: Four hundred copies on small quarto paper and one hundred copies on demy octavo paper. Reprinted by the Alderbrink Press. Ralph Fletcher Seymour Company, Chicago, 1907.

WHISTLER'S LETTERS. (Now at the Luxembourg.) Published by M. Bénédite, in the Gazette des Beaux-Arts. Paris: May, June, August, September, 1905. (31)

Biographical

A SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND WORKS OF GEORGE W. WHISTLER, CIVIL ENGINEER. By George L. Vose, President of the Boston Society of Civil Engineers. Portrait, frontispiece. Small 4to, 45 pages. Boston: Lee & Shepard, Publishers. New York: Charles T. Dillingham, 1887. (75)

Father of James McNeill Whistler.

ANNALS OF AN ENGLISH FAMILY. By the Rev. Rose Fuller Whistler. London: 1887. (76)

"TRILBY." By George Du Maurier. Part third of first appearance as a serial, Harper's Magazine, vol. lxxxviii., March 1894. Pages 567-587, "The Idle Apprentice," Joe Sibley. (Whistler.) (77)

Mr Whistler's public exception to the allusion was taken in a letter to the Pall Mall Budget, written from Paris and beginning: "It would seem, notwithstanding my boastful declaration, that, after all,

I had not, before leaving England, completely rid myself of that abomination—'The friend.'"

The matter was taken up by the London agents of Harper & Brothers, Messrs Osgood, M'Ilvane & Co., and an agreement made satisfactory to the artist by which the allusion was cut out of the novel when issued in book form, and a letter of apology was published in Harper's Magazine for October 1894, under "Literary Notes," page 4.

Writing to Sir W. H. Russell about "Trilby" from Folkstone, under date of Sept. 18, 1895, Mr Du Maurier said: "I'm afraid I have drawn mostly on my imagination for the characters in 'Trilby.' I had rather portrayed Whistler—but he objected, so I expunged him. . . . The only character from Life is 'Sandy, the Laird'—my old friend T. R. Lamont of the Old Water Colour Society—who seems rather pleased with my portrait of him. Svengali is a figment of fancy."

FORS CLAVIGERA. By John Ruskin. Issued originally in 8vo pamphlet form, 96 numbers, under the general title, "Letters to the Workmen and Laborers of Great Britain." 1871-1884. London: Smith, Elder & Co., 15 Waterloo Place; sold only by G. Allen, Heathfield Cottage, Keston, Kent. (113)

In "Letter the Seventy-ninth," July 2, 1877, page 201, occurs the reference to the "Nocturne" in the Grosvenor Gallery Exhibition, which led to the famous libel suit with its farthing verdict in favor of the artist, reading:—

"For Mr Whistler's own sake, no less than for the protection of the purchaser, Sir Coutts Lindsay ought not to have admitted works into the gallery in which the ill-educated conceit of an artist so nearly approached the aspect of wilful imposture. I have seen, and heard, much of cockney impudence before now; but never expected to hear a coxcomb ask two hundred guineas for flinging a pot of paint in the public's face."

The number containing the article in question carries this imprint in addition to the regular title: "London: Printed for the Author, Hazell, Watson and Viney, London and Aylesbury, to be had of Mr George Allen, Sunnyside, Orpington, Kent. Price, ten pence." Paged 181-213.

The work was finally issued in book form, comprising eight volumes 8vo.

THÉODORE DURET. CRITIQUE D'AVANT-GARDE. Salon de 1870, Les Peintres Impressionistes, Claude Monet, Renoir, Édouard Manet, L'Art Japonais, Hokousai, James Whistler, Sir Joshua Reynolds et Gainsborough, Richard Wagner, Arthur Schopenhauer, Herbert Spencer. 8vo. UNIVERSITY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK. State Library Bulletin. Bibliography No. 1. May, 1895. Guide to the study of James Abbott McNeill Whistler. Compiled by Walter Greenwood Forsyth and Joseph Le Roy Harrison. Library School Reading Seminar. 1893. 8vo, 14 pages. Pamphlet. Covers. Albany, 1895. (123)

This colourless little compilation, for some unknown reason, gave Mr Whistler great annoyance. Mr Frederick Keppel sent a copy to Joseph Pennell and another to Ernest Brown in London, which caused the artist to break their friendly relations, accusing Mr Keppel of "gratuitous zeal" in circulating "one of the most curiously malignant innuendoes in the way of scurrilous half-assertions it has been my fate hitherto to meet."
